POSES, THE VILLAGE

Poses, a village marked by the river

Known as early as year 700, "PAUSE" would get its name from the difficulties the watermen had to get over a strong current section called the "strait of Poses". This section required a lot of horses and men and also a moment of "pause » (french word for break) after the efforts.

In the 19th century, when more than 80% of the local population was made of watermen- the inhabitants of Poses - who used to be haulers and carters, in the age of steam, became tug captains, their speciality during one century.

History anecdote : Nicolas Kassillon, a man from Poses, transferred in 1840 the ashes of Napoléon I from Rouen to Paris.

The Association suggests that you come for a guided tour of the Fauvette and the Midway. These boats are intended to show you our rich heritage in connexion with the river.

THE MIDWAY BARGE

The Midway barge

Originally this barge was used to be towed.

It gives you the opportunity to see a waterman and his family's quarters. You can discover in the hold its huge helm, other instruments and tools which are displayed forming a real museum: the waterman's everyday personal items, a steam engine, old engines, Seine boats models, models of the dam showing the evolution of the work, one of which is on a scale of 1 to 10 and a model of the lock actually showing the process.

A modest history of the river Seine is also presented to you as well as some historical local facts.

THE FAUVETTE

The Seine river tug, the Fauvette

After being abandoned for 14 years, this boat was turned into a push barge and was purchased by the local council in 1987. The wreck that was naturally doomed to scrap iron was completely refitted to its original state thanks to former watermen.

It was officially listed as part of the national heritage in 1992 and is now able to sail again.

This boat dating from 1928 is unique in its kind and entirely open to visitors who can see the captain's cabin and the engine room.

You will be guided by former watermen who will bring back to life the bygone days for you.
